Nixon Calls Vetoed Bill Inflationist

Money Package Labeled 'Unfair'

By Richard L. Lyons

WASHINGTON, Jan. 37 (WP).

—President Nixon told Congress
today that he vetoed a $19.7 billion health-education-labor appropria-tion bill because it would promote inefficiency, misdirect federal money and feed inflation.

Mr. Nixon had signed his veto night after telling the American people that to do otherwise would be to surrender in the fight against inflation. Congress added $1.36 billion to the bill, beyond what Mr. Nixon bad asked for, mainly to boost certain educations

The President, who sent the measure back to Congress today with a lengthy formal message explaining his rejection, said in his TV statement last night that the increased appropriation is not in the best interest of all the American people because it is the wrong amount for the wrong pur pose at the wrong time.

Democratic congressional leaders were cautiously claiming they had the necessary two-thirds majority to overturn Mr. Nixon's veto, but Republican legislative leaders disputed this.

GOP Senate leader Hugh Scott (Pa.) said Republicans in the House—or, failing that, in the Senate—would support the Presi-dent and muster enough strength,

The core of Mr. Nixon's objection to the bill appeared to be a $600 million item for grants to schools in areas where large numbers of children of federal employees and of servicemen attend with the prime minister at Blair public school. The administration had asked for just over $200 million. In his veto message today, Mr. Nixon said:

"Four successive Presidents have serve Board, Chairman Paul W. program. #### Party Tries to Rebuild

Indonesia: Anti-Communist Battle Goes On

By Stanley Karnow DJAKARTA (WP). Like the mythical phoenix, the Indonesian Communists have gone through a recurrent cycle of spicide and resurrection three times in the past four decades. A key question here now is whether they can plausibly rebuild their organization-once the largest in any non-Communist nation-after the massive military crackdown that decimated them following their abortive coup d'état in late 1965. The collapse of that coup was an event of enormous significance, not only for Indonesia but in the broader perspective of international development in Asia at the time.

There is, for example, little doubt that their elimination greatly encouraged the Johnson dministration to continue escalating in the Far East.

Among other things, the Communist failure shattered growing alignment between Peking and Djakarta and, in the process, it may have indirectly prompted North Vietnam and North Kores to revise their attitudes toward Red

Impact in Peking It is fair conjecture, too, that the Communist eetback exacerbated tensions in Peking be-tween the faction around former President Liu Shao-chi, which apparently favored the coup, and Mac Tse-tung's partisans, who bold that People's War is the only valid revolutionary

In the estimation of Indonesian and Western specialists here, the prospects for a Communist revival in the years shead depend on two principal

The first of these factors is the capacity of the remnant Communist leaders, now reported to be in disarray, to achieve a degree of unity and shape a coherent plan for the future.

The other is the ability of the predominantly military government under Gen. Suharto to promote domestic, social, economic and political programs to curb the potential attraction of At the moment, both the Communists and the government appear to be aware of their respective shortcomings. But, in typically slow, mysterious Indonesian fashion, neither has yet been able to turn to effective long-range action. Organized after World War I by Hendrik Sneevliet, a Dutch agent of the Comintern the Indonesian Communist party offered change from two basic conditions that troubled the people of this vast archipelago. While they themselves built their hierarchy along feudalistic lines, the Communists promised terns of authority that still persist, particularly in Java.

During their formative years, they also promised liberation from Dutch colonial rule, which had transformed indonesia toto a huge plantation. Later, even though they backed him, they offered prosperity in place of ex-President Sukarno's ruinous Their main weaknesses, however, were impatience and a tendency to indulge in "subjec-tivism." which is Marxist-Leninist jargon for "wishful thinking.'

In 1926 and 1927, despite Stalin's warning that they were 'over-rating" their strength, the budding Indonesian Communists triggered a series of rebellions that were easily put down -the Dutch police.

They repeated their error in 1948, when they tried to stage an uprising at Madiun, a town in East Java. This time they were crushed, with appalling losses, by the newly-independent Sukarno government.

Flourishing Again

By the early 1960s, the Communists were flourishing again, now with Sukarno's blessing. In addition to their card-carrying members, they counted some 12 million sympathizers in various peasant, student, labor and cultural associations. Though the precise reasons for their conduct have never been fully clarified, the Communists apparently launched their coup on the night of Sept. 30, 1965, to prevent a similar move by the army.

But the coup, in which the Communists murdered six Indonesian generals, misfire d badly. The army unleashed a terror in which an estimated half-million suspected Communists and fellow travelers were slaughtered from Sumatra through the easternmost islands of the archipelago.

Virtually the entire Communist leadership, including the party chairman D.N. Aidit, was killed in the messacre. After that, Indonesian Communists who had been visiting Peking and survived the holocaust criticized the bungled

coup as a "form of military adventurism . . . detached from Parroting Mao Tss-tung's pinciples, these Communist exiles in Peking urged their comrades at home to prepare for "armed struggle" by mobilizing peasant support.

Apparently based in New Delhi, a pro-Soviet faction calling itself the Marxist-Leninist group of the party emerged with pleas to the Communists to ignore Maoist advice and to concentrate instead on rebuilding their political foundations. But the surviving Communist leaders in Indonesia chose to beed the Chinese.

In 1967, appointing themselves as the new politburo, this group proceeded to reconstruct a covert and more flexible party apparatus apparently modeled on the Viet Cong guerrilia organization in South Vietnam.

They created regional bureaus responsible for small administrative entities and formed village guerrilla units. They also established urban Communist committees. Though mests of the Indonesian Army was loyal to Gen. Subarto, many military units and individual officers had been recruited into the Communist machine through a clandestine network known as the "Biro Chusus," or "Special Bureau." Several of these units and officers continued to be a part of the Communist underground after the failure of the 1965 coup d'etat. Emulating Mao, who had re-treated to Yenan in the mid-1930s, the new Indonesian politburo decided to set up a revolutionary base in a remote, hilly area south of the town of Blitar,

Here, in the style of the Viet Cong, the Communists dug connecting caves and tunnels with the help of friendly peasant Here they also debated that

It had happened, he said, because the managements wanted the dispute to go to arbitration, while the eachers have no trust in arbitration arrangements. They want to

The United States and Israel

President Nixon's message of reassurance to American Jewish leaders on the Middle East is, like Secretary of State Rogers's December speech, a simple restatement of long-standing American policy. The two statements are perfectly compatible with each other and with the position taken by the previous administration following the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

The President said that the United States believes peace in the Middle East "can be based only on agreement between the parties and that agreement can be achieved only through negotiations between them." This is the philosophy of the Nov. 22, 1967, Secority Council resolution that the Johnson administration belped to draft and consistently supported. It was reiterated by Secretary Rogers in his Dec. 9 address when he said: "An agreement among the powers themselves."

This basic principle of American policy is in no way inconsistent with the Nixon administration's efforts to facilitate negotiations by working with other permanent members of the Security Council to strengthen the mediation mission of UN Ambassador Gunnar Jarring. In the absence of progress toward a settlement by the parties themeelves, the world community is entitledindeed, obliged-under the UN Charter to seek to promote peace and prevent a new war that threatene all nations.

President Nixon's promise that the United States is "maintaining a careful watch on the relative strength of the forces (in the Middle East) and . . . will not hesitate to provide arms to friendly states as the need arisee," is similar to a pledge President Johnson made to Levi Eshkol, the former premier of Israel, two years ago. There has never been any reason to doubt that the new administration would honor that pledge. Certainly there is no evidence from the fighting fronts to indicate that Israel'e military position has been allowed to deteri-

Surely Israelis and their most ardent supporters here must recognize, as Washington bas done, that arms alone cannot insure Israel'e security in the long run. If the United States and Israel are to be partners in Israel's defence, as they must be as long as the Arabs and their arms suppliers pursue a policy of war, they should also be partners in an unrelenting search for peace. If Mr. Nixon'e statement has eased unfortunateand we believe unjustified-apprehensions over Mr. Rogers's proposals, that partnership and the cause of peace will have been etrengthened.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Making of Mideast Policy

Not for the first time, a general presidential pronouncement issued for domestic considerations has become a major international event with effects unanticipated and unsought. By this familiar process of political alchemy Mr. Nixon'e statement of Sunday to a conference of Jewish leaders here was quickly transformed. So far as we can understand, the President enunciated those elements of past policy most calculated to ease the criticism and concern of this particular audience. The essential words were: "We will not besitate to provide arms to friendly states as the need arises." Israel was identified as "one" of the United States' friends, What is so new in any of this?

The answer is that the United States is now so crucially involved in the Mideast that any White House statement-or silenceimmediately has piled upon it the assorted hopes and fears of the various parties and spectatore to the dispute. Thus do some Arabs, listening to the Nixon statement, come under pressure to denounce it as proof of American kowtowing to Israel, Some Israelis, on the other hand, have reacted no less extravagantly by reading the statement as a reaffirmation of full American support after a period of some little uncertainty.

The truth, we euspect, ie that American policy is unchanged: the United States remains a friend of Israel, and the United States remains hopeful of facilitating a settlement acceptable to Arabs and Israelis alike. This being the kind of democracy it is, domestic groups-pro-Arab oilmen one day, pro-Israeli Jews the next-use their of a cordial rapport with the govaccess to the President to urge their views upon him. It is his duty to sort out these pressures and phase them into his concept of the country's interests, and we do not envy him the task, PARIS.—The French government reckons it can court the Arabs with arms-as most recently because the very idea of an existing Middle Eastern power balance is outmoded. The assumption is that ultimate decisions of Middle Eastern war and peace are made in distant capitals and therefore France can freely export weapons for political objectives serving French interests without altering any status ono.

As is often the case in this Cartesian land, France's logic is bril-liantly reasoned but founded on doubtful premises. The Pompidou government had constricted Gaullist diplomacy from global to Eu-ropean and Mediterranean circles and intensified diplomacy in the inland sea, improving relations with Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia and Paris is right in linking Soviet Mediterranean policy to Soviet Arab policy, both being directly reflected in Europe. But the scale of its Mediterranean policy is so large that the question arises wbether France, which exceeded its capabilities in distant areas like Southeast Asia and Nigeria, can easily sustain even this less grandiose aspiration.

The Shining Hour Of 'Environment'

By Meg Greenfield

WASHINGTON.—We were sitting might have a fighting change around one day, arguing in And for the inventive, not to exercisiting detail—the merits of the malicious, there are even to some proposed new stretch of highway, when suddenly someone said, in behalf of his own position, that the question before us was really part of a larger "environmental"

Those not engaged in debate had long since glazed over, but I now felt myself sitting up in my chair and knew my expression had changed, even as the rest of the room was coming to life "Environmental?" Had this something to do with "environment," then? Good God, man, why didn't you say so in the first place!

When we had finished looking alert, we began to look grave; even, you might say, troubled; certainly concerned. Environment: I can remember a time when people only said environment because they thought that somebody else was going to say heredity. But we're none of us getting any younger, and that was another dispute. Nowadays (and with amazing speed) environment has become something else again—one of those benedictory words that confer the Lord's blessing on everything they

There have been others over the years. For a while you could add a measure of worth to almost anything you said by confiding that it had something to do with the "crisis in the cities." And when I am trapped in an argument, I find I can still get a little reverential silence (in which to regroup my forces and plan a new charge) by asserting that it is all—is it not?--a matter of "national priorities."

But priorities and cities have pretty much had it-in fact, perhaps, as well as in debate. golden touch now belongs to the more capacious, if not all-inclusive "environment." I knew the term had carried the day when I read, in December, that President Nixon had decided to try to double the federal budget for support of the arts and that be and his aides were explaining their interest in art and seeking to add to its image by pointing out that art was part of the environment.

All Together Now

Since then, of course, more has happened, so that we can now count among the self-declared pro-environment forces: President Nixon, Ronald Reagan, Nelson Rockefeller, NATO, and the student left. It is an unusual grouping, you must admit, and that fact is a faithful reflection, I think, of the strengths and weaknesses of the term we have contrived to anoist. These, in turn, are worth a bit of scrutiny, if only to give some guidance as to how we might make the most of "environment's" shining hour and what pitfalls and possibilities lie ahead.

The strengths of the term are self-evident. There is, first, its sheer size, its capacity for endless expansion: what is the environment, after all, if not, as it were, to construe environmental problems rather narrowly as meaning air and water pollution, say, or junk heaps or billboards or traific jams. But others toss in the whole "consumer" question, and still others include overcrowded housing, and the term "environment" itself, being a great con-sumer—the crisis in the cities as

Double or Nothing?

Why has not the truth been told concerning the French negotiations with Libya? Why is a powerful air force made available to the Arabs, through Libya? The U.S.S.R. has reaffirmed its total support of the Arab nations. In the event of an East-West clash. is there not a great danger of seeing the Arabs join the Communist side?

Is this not playing double or nothing? Why not maintain a balanced policy keeping the friendship of Israel? . . . Why has the risk been taken a month prior to President Pompidou's visit to the United States-a visit intended to strengthen the ties between the two countries-of jeopardizing its success? -From Paris-Jour.

'Europeanization'

President Nixon's policy of transferring responsibility to Salgon just as fast as is prudently possible seems to be succeeding. How depressingly and disgracefully uncertain, by contrast, are the prospects for Europe becoming! For years the Americans have been demanding of Europe a bigger contribution to its own defense. The only result has been increasing reliance on the decreasingly credible American nuclear deterrent. There must be Europeanization as well as Vietnamization. -From the Daily Telegraph (London).

U.S. Backing for Israel

President Nixon's speech Sunday again confirmed the pro-Zionist policies of American leaders and their support of aggression in the Middle East.

In the name of equilibrium, the United States gives more arms to an army of aggression which is occopying vast territories of independent countries and which is carrying out a bloody repression against a people expelled from their homeland; the Palestinian people.

MARSEILLES.—The inherent lyricism and the blend of reality and fantasy that attracts composers of all nationalities and artistic persuasions to the plays of Federico Garcia Lorca have rarely been so sympatheti-cally served as in Mariana which has just been given its first performance by the opera here.

It took some courage to mount this work, for although it won the Prince Plerre of Monaco Prize for lyric composition a few years ago, the composer, Louis Saguer, is an artist who

The play is Lorca's second, and his only historical pieca— Mariana Pineda was executed in 1831 for her part in an uprising during the tyrannical and disastrous reign of Ferdinand VII. The other principal characters are her lover, who takes refuge across the border, leaving her to her fate: 2

A New Rogue's Gallery From Jean Anouilh

PARIS THEATER

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss PARIS, Jan. 27.—Jean Anouilh is the favorite modern playwright in France, a position he has occupied for more than 20 years. He has been consistently more popular with the public than he has been with the critics. Not long ago when one of his plays - "Pauvre Bitos" triumphed over a set of poor notices, he exclaimed with gleeful sarcasm: "What a failure-for the critics!" As though to make amends for their previous alights, the critics hailed his 'Cher An-tome,' a Pirandelloesque proving of a dramatist's psyche, as a masterwork when it opened at the Comédie des Champs-Elysées last autumn. The second Anough play of the season, 'Les Poissons Rouges." has just ar-rived at the Théatre de l'Œuvre to receive a similar welcome from the critics and at the box

Anouilh's latest comedy, a study in black and rose, again has a playwright as its protagonist and once more his given name is Antoine. Like his Belle Epoque colleague, his head buzzes with a chizophrenic memories and we find him trying frantically to place the revealing incidents of his life in some order. He fumbles long over the puzzle, but in a happy ending the companionship of his little son consoles him for the stings and arrows of outrageous

The title is the clue to the man. As a little boy Antoine urinated into the parlor gold-lish bowl and was severaly scolded by his grandmother. This misdemeanor and its reprimand haunt him. This is a typical Anouilh: few authors have harped more on petty human weaknesses, be they of the heart, the mind or the bladder-e trait that Jouvet found repulsive in Anouilh's plays. The present Antoine is a contemporary dramatist, thus Anouilh has a modern setting. "Cher Antoine" seemed often in the style of something by De Cu-rel, while "Les Poissons Rou-ges" with its bare stage, its scarcity of props and its sketchy scenes is rather after the manner of Felicien Marceau.

Although Anouilh is an expert at matters theatrical, there is a laxity to his construction here that belogs the progress of "Les Poissons Rouges." But the parts are more important than the whole. Employing the flash-back technique, he pictures, often very brilliantly, the memories that trouble his anti-hero. For sheer stage writing. the scene between Antoine and the offended hunchback doctor is a minor masterniece The direction by the author, assisted as usual by Roland Pietri, is of a rare efficiency, but it is the acting, above all that transforms the text into such rewarding theater. Jean-Pierre Marielle is the self-mocking dra-matist; Michel Galabru, the

BLONDIE

By Alan Truscott

North and South were using a strong club system, and the response of one heart was positive and showed a five-card suit. The rebid by North showed a hand equivalent to a standard no-trump opening, and South hinted at slam possibilities by the jump rebid in hearts.

North's sudden leap to Blackwood was ill-advised, for he had nothing in reserve. The fact that he felt compelled to stop short of slam when South show-ed an ace emphasized his previous error: if a player who finds that the partnership has three aces is not willing to bid a slam he was wrong to use Blackwood in the first place.

An opening club lead would have been fatal, but West decided that a trump would be least likely to give away a trick. South won with the ten, drew trumps in two more rounds and faced an interesting planning problem.

There were ten sure tricks and various chances of making the 11th. South tried the spade finesse, which failed. When East won he returned a spade to dummy's king. The diamonds were tested and when the jack did not fall South had to ruff the fourth round and try a club lead. East made two club tricks to defeat the contract.

South was certainly unlucky to fail, for all three side suits lay badly for him. Yet his play was not the best.

After drawing trump he should have played the diamond queen, led to the diamond king and played a low club from dummy. If East has the club queen, a club trick is developed and the spade finesse becomes unnecessary. If West has the club queen, South can still try both minor suits in search of his 11th trick and take the spade finesse at the finish if necessary.

THE AIR NET: THE CASE AGAINST THE WORLD AVIATION CARTEL By K. G. J. Pillai. Grossman. 212 pp. $5.95.

Reviewed by Ralph Nader

THE most efficient c 13umer abuse occurs when its perpetrators institutionalize it in such a complex and authoritative manner that the victims know little of the abuse and nothing of the perpetrator. Few international air passengers have ever heard of the International Air Transport Association. Much less do they possess an elementary understanding of what Dr. Pillai calls one of the most powerful and authoritarian private international cartels that the world has ever seen."

Yet IATA, as a private business association of international airlines, fixes rates, fares and other conditions of air travel and thereby determines who can and cannot fly by keeping prices much higher than would prevail in a competitive industry. Since the aviation industry is heavily subsidized—directly and indirectly—by taxpayers and is rightly considered by many analysts as a "world pub-lic utility." the users stake in IATA is undeniable.

The absence of a user or consumer voice, with or without government, in IATA's deliberations and decisions caught Dr. Pillai's attention while he was studying for a graduate degree at Yale Law School. His doc-toral thesis about this secret society, relying heavily on a meticulous search of the available documents and a sense of relevant logic, unravels for the first time its intricate controls and sanctions over international aviation.

In brief, the situation he depicts is as follows: IATA, with headquarters in Montreal, receives its authority to fix air-line tariffs from various bilateral agreements between various governments. These agreements reserve the right of goveroments to suspend or reject these rates. In practice, however, the combined lobby of state-owned and private airlines has overwhelmed any attempts. including that of the Civil Aeronautics Board, to block rate hikes.

Meeting in secret at various cities around the world, IATA permits no access to its ratemaking machinery on behalf of shippers, passengers of govern-ments. These meetings develop price structures that further codify restrictive practices, protect the most inefficient of airlines, amalgamate a massive number of political variablesand make all these decisions without any explanation and analysis that would allow ex-ternal evaluation.

What emerges from these long, arduous IATA conferences -some extending six weeks or more at an estimated cost to the airlines of $10,000 an hourare the predictable results of the cartel system. These in clude an artificially high rateand-fare celling that reduces the volume of passengers, the diversion of competition into wastefully deceptive promotions about alleged service and aesthetic distinctions between the airlines, the harassment of nonscheduled charter airlines which threaten the screnity of this International fare-fix, and the shortchanging of areas of the world - such as Africa - that cannot mount the lobbyt force within IATA to tame if British-led European bloe gr uses IATA to further Europ domination of the tourist tra

Already in control of fi multibillion-dollar industr IATA is becoming bullish abo its future expansion. With power spreading over the ent field of civil aviation, IATA moving to impose its author over more and more of the ternational tourist industry.

"You must be very proud." Mills shrugged. "At least it's a distinction." he said. "Until the Loser of the Year Award came along. I was beginning to tlunk I was a nobody."

FOR years now there has been a widespread tendency blame much of the revolt of youth-bad manners, offensive dress, allergy to discipline on Dr. Spock whose many books on baby and child care are supposed to have preached the doctrine of "permissiveness." Whether the famous doctor did indeed counsel what memhers of his generation mean by permissiveness need not detain us. Certainly in 'Decent and Indecent," Dr. Spock is anything but permissive.

For 25 years Dr. Spock addressed himself to mothers; in the past six or seven years be has addressed himself to their children It is this new role which landed him in the courts for conspiring to persuade young men not to register for the draft, and thus, for hampering the conduct of the war: a serious business this, and though it is hard to imagine the benevolent doctor engaging in treason that charge was made more than once. The whole country was an interested party: The issues raised by the trial went to the heart of the Bill nf Rights, of the problem of civil disobedience, and of mor-ality. Alas, Dr. Spock has nothing to say about the trial, or about the draft either, and while he has good deal to say about the war it has all been said before.

Warning

What Dr. Spock attempts bere is a larger inquiry, partly psychological, partly moral, into the sickness of our society. Again, it is a familiar activity, one, indeed, that now engages so many commentators that it should doubtless be allotted R special category in the next Bureau of the Census 'ist of occupations. Dr. Spock warns us at once that be proposes to inquire how our society lost its sense of direction, its idealism and its morality. The inquiry is psychological and even psychiatric, it is social, it is po-theme which we associate with his recent activities: the war. It is, be says, an "imbecile" war, and so it is. But how did it happen that an otherwise intelligent and well-meaning peo-ple got themselves involved in an imbecile war? And if almost everyone, from the President on down, is prepared to admit that the war was, and is, a mistake, how does it happen that they are unable to end lt?

Our difficulty, Dr. Spock as-serts, is not intellectual but moral. But he does not really mean that; He means that it psychological. The sickness of our society is born of hatred for the kind of society we have made, or the kind that science and technology have betrayed us into making; the war is born of deep-seated aggressive instincts - instincts rooted in the sexual drives of childhood and of adolescence. in competitiveness, in vanity, in complexes about virility, in

Last Word

But what is to be done about it? "I 'decided," Dr. Spock says, "that we are not likely to save the world by attempting to reform the old parties. which are financially indebted to business, but must build a new political movement that be unambiguously antiimperialist and responsive to human needs." This is, alas, the last we hear of this hopeful

Dr. Spock devotes some final pages to the problems of the universities. Here he is not at his happiest. He observes, quite rightly, that in their opposition to the war, the draft, racism, pollution, and so forth, the young are quite clearly on the right track, and that they have helped dramatize the need for reform in these areas. The moral bere is clear: When the young address their attention and their protests to those institutions and policy makers responsible for these evils, they do a public service. Let them then protest the Pentagon, the State Department, the militaryindustrial complex, the labor unions, political machines that fail democracy and courts that fail to do justice.

But this is not at all Dr. Spock's conclusion. He cele-brates their attack not on these institutions but on the universities. But the university is not responsible for the evils that distress the young. Quite the contrary: it can claim at least some responsibility for the students who protest these evils. To attack the university is to attack the one major institution that has pretty consistently been the critic of the Establish-ment, and the innovator in society.

Dr. Spock is a great man; to the young, and not to the young alone, he is an heroic figure. Society owes him a deep debt, for the dignity with which he has conducted himself, for his courage, for his integrity, for his indefatigable service to tha commonwealth. His book is full of insights, of lofty sentiments and of righteous indignation which most of us can share. What it lacks is logical consistency. What it lacks is what the protest movement most needs-just what Dr. Spock himself provided in his sponsorship of the march on Washington, in his argument against the legality of the war and of the draft, in his appeal to a higher law and to the historic right of civil disobedience to tyrannical and immoral governments.
